

Nicole “Nicki” Shook serves on Johnstown City Council and brings a background in business, community leadership, and volunteer service to her role. She was sworn into office in January 2026 and is committed to responsible governance, transparency, and long-term planning for the city.

Professionally, Nicki works in sales and business development, where she manages client relationships, budgeting, strategic planning, and performance goals across a regional territory. Her career experience provides practical insight into organizational management, fiscal responsibility, and data-driven decision-making—skills she applies directly to municipal leadership.

Nicki has been actively involved in the Johnstown community for several years. She is a founding board member of Johnstown Lifestyle, a 501(c)(3) nonprofit focused on promoting health, wellness, and community connection through local programming and events. She has also served on the Greater Johnstown Parks & Recreation District Board and has supported numerous community initiatives, including family-focused events, youth programs, and volunteer-led activities.

She is deeply engaged in local schools and youth organizations, regularly volunteering and supporting extracurricular programs. As a parent, Nicki values policies that support families, public safety, and sustainable growth while preserving the character of the community.

On City Council, Nicki focuses on infrastructure planning, economic development, and accountability in government operations. She believes effective local leadership requires preparation, collaboration, and open communication with residents.

Nicki and her family live in Johnstown, where she remains committed to listening to constituents and working constructively to serve the best interests of the community.
