ABOUT ME

Teaching resilience by helping women turn their pain into purpose and ashes into strategy.

Angelina Crosby-Pigott

Angelina Crosby-Pigott is a Speaker, Author, and Entrepreneur who teaches resilience by helping women turn pain into purpose and ashes into the catalyst for something beautiful.

A Cost Engineer & certified Project Manager with 25-year experience leading cost strategy on million and billion-dollar projects for Fortune 50 companies like Westinghouse Nuclear, Chevron, and Shell in oil and gas, nuclear power, and data center technology—Angelina brings Fortune 50 strategic frameworks to personal transformation. She is also a published author, former ordained minister and church planter, real estate investor, and CEO of Elevate Management LLC.

After losing her husband suddenly, Angelina did something radical — she became her own project. With no roadmap for grief, she applied the same frameworks she used to oversee complex projects and systematically rebuilt her life. She learned that grief doesn't have to destroy you — it can refine you and when your life burns to the ground you can rise from the ashes. She created a pathway for others, becoming the example she once needed.

Through her keynote presentations and transformation programs, Angelina delivers strategic and soul-based guidance on rebuilding during disruption, leadership resilience, holding strategy and surrender in the same hand, and designing your next chapter when life demands reinvention. Because when life burns to the ground, you don't need motivation — you need a methodology. She is an equipper who nurtures the divine potential in others — helping women reclaim their purpose and rise.

When Angelina is not speaking, she can be found traveling, writing, coaching, or consulting.

1 Reborn by Fire: How I Rose from the Ashes and Left a Path for Others

"911." That was the last word Angelina Crosby-Pigott's husband Rudy ever spoke. In the span of eighteen days, all four of her children became fatherless. Eight days before her fifteenth wedding anniversary, two words from a doctor changed her life forever: "I'm sorry."

She didn't just lose her husband — she lost who she was with him. But Angelina couldn't afford to fall apart. So she mothered while grieving. Planned a funeral while unraveling. Consoled, prayed, and pretended — until her body told the truth her mouth refused to speak. With no roadmap for grief, she used what she knew: strategy.

As a professional who manages multi million and billion-dollar projects, Angelina did the unthinkable — she became her own project. And piece by sacred piece, she began to heal. In this unforgettable keynote, Angelina shares how grief doesn't have to destroy you — it can refine you. She is the example she once needed, and she's here to show you what happens when a woman stops hiding and decides to rise.

2 The Surrender Strategy: Why the Most Powerful Move in High-Stakes Leadership Is Letting Go

In a world that celebrates hustle, grind, and control, the most counterintuitive leadership move might be surrender. Not giving up — but releasing what you can't control so you can strategically focus on what you can.

Angelina Crosby-Pigott spent 25 years leading cost strategy on multi million and billion-dollar programs where precision, control, and risk mitigation were everything. When life handed her a project with no playbook: sudden loss, single motherhood, and a future that looked nothing like the one she'd planned. The frameworks that built her career couldn't save her — until she learned to surrender the outcome while still owning the process.

In this keynote, Angelina teaches leaders how to hold strategy and surrender in the same hand — and why that tension is exactly where breakthrough lives.

From We to Me:

The Identity No One Prepares You to Rebuild

What happens when the person who helped define your life is suddenly gone? When "we" becomes "me" and the woman in the mirror feels like a stranger?

Angelina Crosby-Pigott knows this disorientation intimately. After losing her husband suddenly — just eight days before their fifteenth wedding anniversary — she faced a truth no one talks about: grief isn't just about missing someone. It's about losing the version of yourself that existed with them.

In this strategic and soulful keynote, Angelina unpacks the 18-month journey from survival to rising — the phases of shock, reorientation, and reconstruction that every woman in transition must navigate. This isn't about "moving on." It's about moving through — with intention, with strategy, and with your soul intact.

Angelina Crosby-Pigott (she/her) is a Speaker, Author, and Transformation Coach available for keynote presentations, workshops, media interviews, and spokesperson opportunities. Her rare combination of Fortune 50 strategic rigor and soul-grounded wisdom — paired with her powerful story of rising from the ashes after devastating loss — excites and mobilizes audiences worldwide.
