

What To Look For In Your Photographer

An experienced photographer will have a vast repertoire of shots to draw from.

Having worked with many couples in various locations and situations, they will be able to guide you as to the best poses that work for you – shots that are natural and don't make you feel uncomfortable

It's about capturing images of you being you but, being guided by your photographer.

Discuss images you'd like prior to the wedding and provide examples from Pinterest or other internet resources so that your photographer can visualise what's in your mind's eye.

If you need advice on timings and planning, ask for their help.

A pre wedding shoot can help the couple and your photographer to get to know one another better, and the feedback can help the photographer to find the pictures they love and the ones they really really love.

"Graham was the wedding fairy-god photographer I never knew I needed.

Graham was a pillar of calm, wisdom and enthusiasm that actually made my husband and I feel so excited on our wedding day." Eden Harrington-Jones

My photography aims to capture those special moments as they happen with little direction from me.

I meet many couples, and their biggest request is for natural, unobtrusive and a relaxed style of photography that tells the story of their romance and that would make a centrepiece in their home.

This really does describe my style.

"I love the spontaneous way that couples interact with each other. I don't get couples to do things that are not them or that make them feel awkward. "

Your wedding day is one of the most important days of your life.

Graham Lee says "We are there more as observers, trying to be as unobtrusive as possible and recognising that it is your day, recording the events of your day as they unfold"
