Is a French Bulldog Right for You?

Personal Checklist

Before you fall in love with those big ears and squishy face, let's make sure a Frenchie truly fits your lifestyle. This quick checklist will help you assess if this breed is right for you—honestly, it's not just about wanting one, it's about being ready.

Answer YES or NO to each question:

Lifestyle Compatibility

Are you okay living with a dog that snores loudly and might grunt or “talk” during the day?

Can you provide a stable home where your Frenchie won't be left alone for more than 4–6 hours at a time?

Do you prefer a companion dog that thrives on being near you and doesn't like being left out of things?

Would you be okay skipping long outdoor adventures during extreme heat or cold to keep your pup safe?

Are you looking for a lower-energy dog that still enjoys short walks and playtime, but doesn't need hours of activity?

Financial Readiness

Are you financially prepared for an upfront cost of $6,000–$10,000+ for a well-bred, health-tested Frenchie?

Would an unexpected $1,000+ vet bill cause financial strain, or do you have a plan (insurance or savings) for that?

Have you budgeted for monthly care costs like food, vet visits, pet insurance, training, and grooming ($150–$300/month)?

Are you okay investing in preventative care like vaccinations, regular check-ups, and high-quality food?

Financial Readiness

Do you have time to socialize and train your dog—especially in the critical first year?

Are you comfortable with potty training a breed that can be a bit stubborn at times?

Can you commit to short daily walks, indoor playtime, and keeping your Frenchie mentally stimulated?

Are you willing to clean facial folds, wipe paws, and keep up with basic grooming to avoid skin issues?

Jane Smith

Are you prepared to be a loving, but firm, leader when it comes to setting healthy boundaries?

Do you value companionship and want a dog that will be glued to your side most of the day?
