H2A Visa Application Process

The H-2A Program is authorized under the Immigration and Nationality Act (INA) and allows a U.S. employer to hire foreign workers on a temporary basis to perform agricultural work when there are not sufficient U.S. workers available.

This is a multi-stage process which requires the filing for authorization from the State Work Agency, filing the H2A application with the US Department of Labor, Recruiting US Workers, obtaining certification from the US Department of Labor, and the filing and approval of the visa petition by the USCIS.

Once the USCIS has approved the visa application (Form I-129), it is necessary to have the foreign laborers appear for an appointment with the US Consulate and arrange for transportation to the worksite within the United States.

If you find that your farming operation could benefit from this type of seasonal labor, I would love to help your operation grow and assist you with the H2A visa application process from the filing of the necessary documents to the arrival and departure of your foreign workers.
