THE SUPER MODEL

Superfans are created at the intersection of your story and every customer's story.

/ˈsōpərfan/

noun

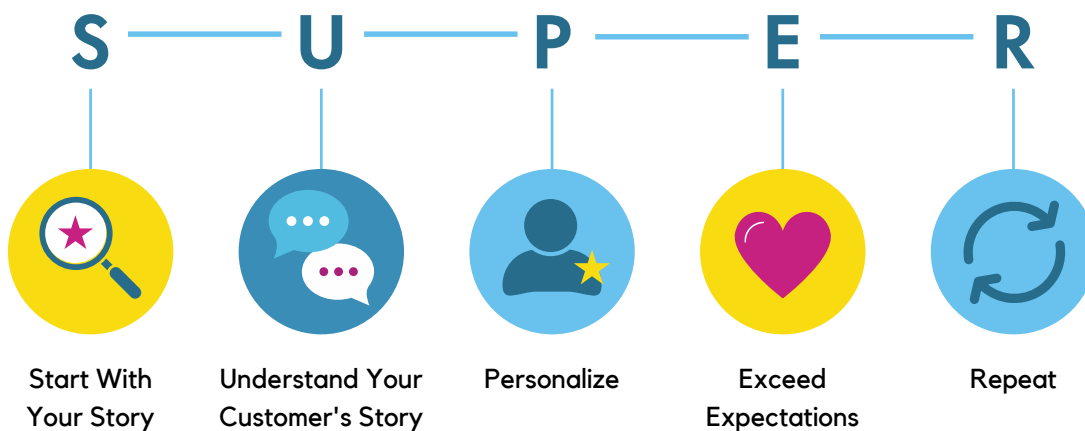

A superfan is a customer or stakeholder who is so delighted by their experience with a brand, product, or service that they will return and tell their friends.

WHERE THE SUPERFAN MAGIC HAPPENS

In sales and marketing, the "why" and "who" are always more important than the "how." The "why" represents your story. The "who" represents your customer's story.

Until you master both of these, the "how" (marketing and sales channels) doesn't matter, because it will not be effective if the first two aren't aligned. If you want to create superfans effectively, being great isn't good enough. You've got to be SUPER:

CRAFTING YOUR ORIGIN STORY

Your Origin Story helps people understand how you became the person you are, and why you're inspired to help lead them from where they are to where they're going.

Answer the following prompts:

The thing I love most about my company/job is:

I love it because:

Doing the thing makes me feel:

The earliest example I can remember feeling that way is:

A pivotal moment in my childhood was when:

S: Start With Your Story

Other times in my life I can recall feeling that way include:

If I was to describe my “calling” in life to someone, I would describe:

I feel like I tap into that when:

My five-year-old self would be in awe of the adult I’ve become because:

The thing about my job that my five-year-old self would find most fascinating is:

S: Start With Your Story

Pretend you're a reality TV producer. You're working on a show about exceptional people whose jobs helps others in unique or unexpected ways. As a producer, you have to create the introductory clip that introduces the audience to the character and hooks them. You're familiar with the kind of clip – in 30-to-60 seconds, the audience goes from totally disinterested to feeling like they know this person. They're rooting for them.

Use the space below to write your origin story in a way that would make a reality TV viewer take notice. Include at least one memorable story from your childhood and a pivotal moment or event that helped set you on the path to where you're at now.

Ensure your story includes at least one of the strengths you identified in the first exercise and either directly or indirectly shines a light on one or more of your top values.

S: Start With Your Story

YOUR STORY SETLIST

Your Origin Story should be one of the most compelling stories you tell, but it should not be your only story. Just like every successful cover band keeps a list of the “greatest hits” they’re ready to break out and play with a moment’s notice, you should have a list of MEMORABLE go-to stories to help you connect with prospective customers.

Use the space below to list at least 8 - 10 stories, anecdotes, or fun facts that you could tell to bolster your position as the right fit for a potential customer. These can be funny, poignant, or memorable anecdotes that will help partners and potential customers feel like they know you.

Again, put on your reality TV producer hat. If the stories you list are “share-worthy,” meaning the person you tell the story to would be likely to tell another person, you’re on the right track.

ABOVE & BEYOND

Once again, this is a great place to reflect and pull inspiration from brands, companies, and professionals who've wowed you in the past. Take a few minutes to think of three times companies or professionals have exceeded your expectations and three times you've been let down. What can you learn from each example?

GRATITUDE & APPRECIATION

As you already know, money can't buy superfans. That's an incredible advantage for people whose industries are regulated in their gift-giving and for salespeople and marketers with small budgets.

Think about some of the most meaningful gifts you've ever received. Some of them may not have been gifts in the traditional sense at all. How can you replicate those memorable moments' sincerity and impact to create stand-out experiences that exceed your customer's expectations?

Hint: It's not about how much you spend. It's about the thought and intention behind the action. Usually, the intention should be showing thanks, gratitude, and/or appreciation. Handwritten notes can be as meaningful as any gift, and personalized mementos can become family heirlooms regardless of their "street" value.

Make a list of no-cost or low-cost gestures that will help you exceed your client's expectations before, during, and after your initial interactions.

ASK AND YOU'RE LIKELY TO RECEIVE

You're much more likely to get referrals when you ask for them — especially if you personalize the ask! Take some time now to outline your referral strategy.

Who are some loyal customers or partners I could ask for referrals now?

When is an ideal time to ask customers for referrals or introductions moving forward?

What process can I design to ensure I never forget this step? It might be a checklist item, a box in your CRM, or even a handwritten note. The system is less important than its regular execution.

CH-CH-CH-CHANGES

To quote the Brady kids, "When it's time to change, you've got to reeeearraaaaaange..." What systems can you update or implement for the first time to help make "awesome and often" the rule and not the exception?

The change I already know I'm most excited to implement is:

Fields I need to add to my CRM to track my customers' stories are:

I won't forget to implement the items I outlined today because I will:
