To create the most famous fun form of tea, blooming tea, downy tea shoots are assembled by the agile hands of workers. They are tied into small bundles with white cotton thread, then bouquets of flowers are inserted in the centre. The small bunches are closed around this floral centre, making a sculpted ball enclosed in a piece of fabric that conserves the shape and draws out any excess moisture.

After being prepared, the flower balls are then put in a dehydrator to be fully dried.
