

BELOW: Like a giant exclamation mark, a wall-mounted, oil-rubbed bronze charger and handsome pendant anchor the living room. Pendant, Georgian Design Centre; charger by Martha Sturdy, Hollace Cluny; console, The Door Store.

The beauty of a home is not found in the things, memories within its walls. It's the pencilled lines on the kitchen door frame marking a child's growing height, the bonks on the mudroom's wooden bench made by years of joyfully kicked-off winter boots and the dribbles of wax on the front porch step left by Halloween pumpkins. But when this young Toronto family — two busy professionals, Heather and her husband, Jonathan, and their two kids, Vivienne and George — moved into their new country home in Kimberley, Ont., two years ago, it was a blank slate: the paint was barely dry, the woodwork was pristine and the floors were still unscathed by the posse of little feet to come.

Purchased in 2016, the 20-hectare property had nothing more than a long-abandoned farmhouse and an old barn on it, but the panoramic view of fabled Beaver Valley was so spectacular it gave Heather and Jonathan goosebumps. "Looking back,

106 H&H OCTOBER 2020 SEE SOURCE GUIDE

Toronto designer Allison Willson, who had worked with them on the decorating of the family's home in Toronto. "The exterior architecture inspired a contemporary farmhouse look," says Allison, adding that the challenge was to bring warmth and authenticity to the new-build with its wall-to-wall white interior "that's buried in snow half of the year." So she layered in textures that were as comforting to the eyes as to the touch (think nubby bouclé-covered chairs, braided wool and sisal rugs, reclaimed elm floors, a neutral palette and a carefully calibrated mix of clean-lined contemporary furniture and vintage pieces blessed with the patina of age). "The goal was to make this new house feel lived in and reflective of the family who lives here," says Allison.

Now that the family spends every weekend and holiday at this home, as the seasons change so, too, do the signs of country life: there are skis and snowshoes in the mudroom during the winter, and hiking boots and bathing suits are strewn about all summer long. There's a firepit for marshmallow-toasting outside, a telescope poised for stargazing in the backyard and Muskoka chairs on the patio for traffic area like the kitchen.

With their low-sheen finish,

reclaimed elm floors are practical and low-maintenance in a high-

SEE SOURCE GUIDE H&H OCTOBER 2020 111

LEFT: The principal bedroom's clean-lined headboard and neutral grey, linen and cream palette create a calming vibe. Nightstand, RH; table lamp, Serena & Lily. BOTTOM LEFT: A pair of cosy bouclé-covered chairs by the bedroom's picture window are the perfect spot to enjoy the view. Armchairs, Cornerstone Home Interiors; coffee table, Elte Mkt.

BOTTOM RIGHT: A new dresser made from reclaimed wood adds texture and history. Dresser, Pottery Barn; mirror, RH; pendant (reflected in mirror), Wil & Co.

watching surprise performances. "Late in the evening, there are hundreds of fireflies," says Heather. "It's such an incredible light show that sometimes we can't help but wake the kids up to see it."

Since they built the house, Heather and Jonathan play host for all family holidays. Thanksgiving is a buzz of happy noise as parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles and cousins arrive to celebrate the season, stay for the weekend and gather round the dining table for a big turkey dinner complete with the fall harvest from their vegetable garden. And at Christmas, everybody hikes through the snow on the property in search of the best tree to cut down and drag home for decorating. "For years, our parents have created happy memories and holiday traditions for each of our families," says Heather. "Now, my husband and I are so grateful that we can do that for them."

