Travel Stroller

We bought our travel stroller five years ago on our first mini trip with our daughter up the coast of California. We purchased the babyzen yo-yo, and let me tell you, we have put more miles on this stroller than any other item. It folds up compact enough to fit as a carry-on, handles all types of roads, and has held up well! The bonus is that you can use it as your primary stroller when your kids are a little older and don't need all the extras.

Slumberpod

The item I never knew I needed. Our first child could sleep under any circumstances, even in our bed. Our second child, not so much. He needs his space, in complete darkness, with a sound machine and probably some optimal temperature. My sister-in-law introduced me to the slumberpod after borrowing it on a camping trip. And this is a must-have no matter how or where we travel for him to get a good night's sleep or nap.

Baby Carriers

I have more than I'd like to admit, but these come on every trip with us. I enjoy soft carriers like the ergobaby or happy baby. My husband prefers the more rigid hiking style carriers for the kids. Either way, they work great getting your kids through the airport, historic castles, or just an excellent way to keep them safe and contained.

Travel Carseat

These are unnecessary as you can rent them at your destination. However, I am a control freak, and this is the thing I like to bring. I started with a light, non-expensive safe car seat, not my primary child's car seat. I eventually added the WAYB Pico travel car seats over the years, and they have been so lovely. They fold up small and are light, I can use them on the airplane, and I am done with it. Just fold it up and put it overhead. They work great at the destination, and I use them at home if I am in a bind and need an extra car seat for a visitor or my kid's grandparents' car.

Travel Crib

My travel crib was something I got so much more use out of than I ever imagined. I bought the Baby Bjorn travel crib five years ago, and this thing has gone everywhere with us and still looks and feels brand new. Honestly, if I were looking at a standard pack n' play, I would have got this one just for its versatility and how well it has held up. I still get used to one of my favorite baby purchases from my first child.
