A Complete Guide to Your Maternity Session

Congrats!!

Your life is about to change in a big and beautiful way! Sure, it will mean dirty diapers, finding lost shoes and not having enough time to shower every day, but when it comes down to it, it is beyond worth it!

You are going to experience your baby growing inside of you, see their first smile, hear their first words, and watch them wobble as they take their first steps.

I feel beyond privileged that you have chosen me to help you capture your pregnancy with photos you will treasure forever.

I am providing you with this guide so we can work together to create photos that meet your vision.

Expectations

The first question most expecting mamas have is, when should I book our session? I always suggest between 30 and 34 weeks. This way your baby bump has popped enough to make for great pictures, and it is also early enough that you will still be comfortable moving and posing.

Clothes. What should you wear? This is an area I really love to help however I can! I have a number of maternity dresses that you can wear if they are the style you are looking for.

I also recommend that you wear a nude or light-colored strapless bra and underwear the day of your shoot.

Tips & Tricks

Moisturize your belly the days leading up to your session and specifically right before it. This will make for great shots if you are planning to have some bare tummy photos.

Pay attention to your nails. A lot of shots will be focused on your hands as you cradle your baby belly. And, unless you know your baby's gender, I suggest staying away from pink or blue nail polish.

Do not waste your time deciding on a pair of shoes to wear. The photos will be so focused on your belly that your feet will not make it into the shots.
