BY MISTY PATERSON

Let's Pop-Up Your Conference

Are you ready to increase parent participation and student agency?

This personalized action plan equips you with a handful of content-neutral, research-based, experience-backed strategies you can use to help learners articulate significance in learning and invite their parents to do the same. Dr A. Sanchez and I call it a Learning Museum.

Here's what you and I will create inside this plan:

- 3-5 Question Prompts and when to use them
- 3-5 Activities you can do with any material
- Photo collage to inspire your students

I'm here to support you in co-creating responsive educational experiences with learners using planning and assessing competencies to empathize, envision, design, experiment, improvise, and pivot as learning unfolds. This is what Pop-Up Studio is all about!

Let's get started shall we?

Your Question Prompts

Use questions whenever you want to turn tasks or activities into investigations. Questions invite learners to bring their personal intellect to the work at hand. Questions immediately trigger thinking and, thus, engagement.

Your Investigative Activities

Investigative activities build interest because they ask something of us. We need to make connections, to reason, and to justify. These are all important critical thinking skills. Here are two of my favourite transdisciplinary activities (which means you can use them in any subject).

Misty's Agency-Building Collage

Pictures of practice help to awaken and unleash potential because they offer a sample of what could be. Check out the photo collage page for authentic, student-created Learning Museum examples. What ideas are waking up for you?
