Excellence In Design: Sacramento

Inviting Joy

Globally influenced yet deeply personal, Marosi White's stunning interiors embrace the unexpected

Since moving to the United States for college and throughout her evolution into one of Sacramento's most respected voices in interior design, Marosi White has cultivated a wide network of relationships that have encouraged her over the years. As a former educator in the field of interior design and the current founder and principal designer at Accent Design and Interiors, White's commitment to connection informs both her work and the exceptionally personalized ethos that fuels it.

"I know firsthand the value of feeling supported through major life transitions," White says. "I carry that understanding into the design process with my clients and in connecting with them to create spaces authentic to them."

Whether addressing a top-to-bottom new build or a simple style refresh, White and the Accent team are sought-after for the spaces they create, each a bespoke showcase of White's elegantly eclectic and timeless aesthetic. A native of Malawi and avid traveler, White's interiors are internationally inspired yet deeply personal. Unexpected moments—bold layers of color and pattern, a blend of old and new pieces, and one-of-a-kind elements sourced from global artisans—enliven expertly crafted and beautifully articulated rooms designed to evoke joy.

"My African heritage informs my use of color and pattern," White explains. "I'm drawn to elements that feel authentic, whether it's a client's beloved heirloom or handcrafted pieces."

That authenticity infuses spaces with a sense of character and depth, and fosters creative collaboration with the client, something White strives for in every project.

"We want you to feel connected and excited from start to finish," she says. "You should enjoy the process as much as your finished space."
