

Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association

Want to Know More About these Wonderful Animals?

This message provided by the Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association's Ambassadors for Llamas.

Visit them at www.galaonline.org

GALA LLAMA AMBASSADOR

Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association

Want to Know More About these Wonderful Animals?

This message provided by the Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association's Ambassadors for Llamas.

Visit them at www.galaonline.org

GALA LLAMA AMBASSADOR

Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association

Want to Know More About these Wonderful Animals?

This message provided by the Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association's Ambassadors for Llamas.

Visit them at www.galaonline.org

GALA LLAMA AMBASSADOR

Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association

Want to Know More About these Wonderful Animals?

This message provided by the Greater Appalachian Llama and Alpaca Association's Ambassadors for Llamas.

Visit them at www.galaonline.org

GALA LLAMA AMBASSADOR

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: What do you do with llamas?

A: Their fiber can be made into yarn, they can be therapy animals and visit schools, libraries, etc., and their manure makes a wonderful garden soil amendment. Llamas make good guardians for alpaca, sheep and goats, they are great hiking companions who will gladly carry your stuff, with training they can pull a cart.

Q: Do llamas spit?

A: Yes. It is usually directed at each other, not humans, and is about food, mating, or herd hierarchy. It is a last resort for them as it tastes terrible.

Q: What do llamas eat?

A: Grass, hay, grain formulated for llamas, a mineral supplement.

Q: Where are llamas from?

A: South America. Native to the Andes, they also live in the USA.

Q: Can you ride llamas?

A: No. Llamas are bred to be used as pack animals.

For more information about llamas go to www.galaonline.org

Created by Jane Hamilton-Merritt & Bev Vienckowski

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: What do you do with llamas?

A: Their fiber can be made into yarn, they can be therapy animals and visit schools, libraries, etc., and their manure makes a wonderful garden soil amendment. Llamas make good guardians for alpaca, sheep and goats, they are great hiking companions who will gladly carry your stuff, with training they can pull a cart.

Q: Do llamas spit?

A: Yes. It is usually directed at each other, not humans, and is about food, mating, or herd hierarchy. It is a last resort for them as it tastes terrible.

Q: What do llamas eat?

A: Grass, hay, grain formulated for llamas, a mineral supplement.

Q: Where are llamas from?

A: South America. Native to the Andes, they also live in the USA.

Q: Can you ride llamas?

A: No. Llamas are bred to be used as pack animals.

For more information about llamas go to www.galaonline.org

Created by Jane Hamilton-Merritt & Bev Vienckowski

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: What do you do with llamas?

A: Their fiber can be made into yarn, they can be therapy animals and visit schools, libraries, etc., and their manure makes a wonderful garden soil amendment. Llamas make good guardians for alpaca, sheep and goats, they are great hiking companions who will gladly carry your stuff, with training they can pull a cart.

Q: Do llamas spit?

A: Yes. It is usually directed at each other, not humans, and is about food, mating, or herd hierarchy. It is a last resort for them as it tastes terrible.

Q: What do llamas eat?

A: Grass, hay, grain formulated for llamas, a mineral supplement.

Q: Where are llamas from?

A: South America. Native to the Andes, they also live in the USA.

Q: Can you ride llamas?

A: No. Llamas are bred to be used as pack animals.

For more information about llamas go to www.galaonline.org

Created by Jane Hamilton-Merritt & Bev Vienckowski

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: What do you do with llamas?

A: Their fiber can be made into yarn, they can be therapy animals and visit schools, libraries, etc., and their manure makes a wonderful garden soil amendment. Llamas make good guardians for alpaca, sheep and goats, they are great hiking companions who will gladly carry your stuff, with training they can pull a cart.

Q: Do llamas spit?

A: Yes. It is usually directed at each other, not humans, and is about food, mating, or herd hierarchy. It is a last resort for them as it tastes terrible.

Q: What do llamas eat?

A: Grass, hay, grain formulated for llamas, a mineral supplement.

Q: Where are llamas from?

A: South America. Native to the Andes, they also live in the USA.

Q: Can you ride llamas?

A: No. Llamas are bred to be used as pack animals.

For more information about llamas go to www.galaonline.org

Created by Jane Hamilton-Merritt & Bev Vienckowski